FEATURED KEYNOTES

Think Again: Reimagining What's Possible in a Changing World

Change becomes especially difficult when we confuse the way we have always done something with the reason we do it in the first place.

Audiences leave ready to recognize assumptions that quietly limit innovation, distinguish core values from outdated practices, and see disruption as an opportunity rather than something to fear.

Strategic Storytelling: How Narrative Shapes Culture and Change

Leaders often jump to plans or initiatives without first examining the underlying narrative people are operating from. Before people change what they do, they often have to change the story they believe about what is possible.

Audiences learn how to identify limiting narratives, communicate ideas more powerfully, and use storytelling to create clarity, connection, and momentum.

Human-Centered Leadership in the Age of AI

As technologies like AI continue to evolve at an accelerating pace, leaders face a pressing question: How do we lead wisely, sustainably, and humanely when the terrain itself is changing?

Leaders will learn:

- how to evaluate emerging trends without overwhelming their people
- redesign responsibilities around authentically human work
- use narrative to build trust and mobilize stakeholders around meaningful change
